CONNECTICUT STATE CONVENTION.

In view of the recent developments, we publish this morning, that of the Connecticut Democratic State convention, held at Hartford yesterday, twelve delegates were elected to the Charlotte convention, eleven of whom were from the districts of Bristol, New Haven, and New Haven.

GRANVILLE FOR THE nomination for President.

PENNSYLVANIA DELEGATION AT CHARLESTON.

A despatch from Washington yesterday states that the delegation to the Charleston convention, which includes Major General Vice-President Breckinridge for the Presidential nomination. It is proper to remark that the Pennsylvania Democratic convention, for the selection of delegates, will assemble at Harrisburg on the 21st instant.

This statement, however, is not to be construed as being a prediction that the convention can only be regarded as a prediction, and not as a fact. With this material reliance, then, it should be received, it, however, should prove to be correct, and although it may not be a prediction, it will be the vote for Major Breckinridge, it will make him a prominent candidate for the nomination at Charleston.

The first choice of a great state Pennsylvania, for the nomination of a member of the State, most inevitably exercise great weight with the southern delegations, and especially when that choice is centered upon a popular and eminent man like Major Breckinridge.

It is not to be expected, however, that others of the Middle States, and perhaps some of the New England States, will follow the example of the Pennsylvania delegation.

In this event, the strength of the whole delegation will be given up to Major Breckinridge, as a southern man, who is likely to prove acceptable to all wings of the Democracy in the North and the South.

The voice of both Congress and the Senate would be unanimous in its support for Major Breckinridge, who would secure his nomination at Charleston, giving him two-thirds, which is necessary to a choice.

The case in our opinion, at this moment, is one of suspense, without regard to his character, his conduct, or his popularity, without regard to his record in the Senate, and without regard to his record in the House.

Major Breckinridge, without seeking to a most prominent position in the chances for the nomination. There are elements in his character which are calculated to inspire the highest confidence in his capacity to discharge the trust reposed in him.

His eloquence, sagacity and discretion, and his resolution to join in the warfare upon Senator Douglas, are well known to all.
